In this "what's in it for me?" society, self-absorption has become the norm. Ranging from mere selfishness to the personality disorder of Narcissism, society is replete with this characteristic. A marriage suffering from self-absorption is filled with confusion, unmet needs, loneliness, questions, and resentment. for the Christian committed to a covenant marriage, this is acutely painfull as he or she begins to feel trapped in his or her own vows. The reality is there are followers of Christ who are married to people who wear the mask of Christianity because it makes them look good, while their motives are self-centered rather than Christ-centered. Biblical principles and truths still apply to self-absorbed marriages, but the spouse of a Narcissist has these truths bashed over their head. Jesus offered wisdom for dealing with Pharisees and wolves; however, these truths have yet to be applied to mainstream marital teachings in the Christian community. WOLF: The Self-Absorbed Christian Marriage, is a ground breaking new book that addresses these issues.
