Buying Time: Beating Swords into Plowshares Patricia M. Robertson

During the Cold War, with the doomsday clock at three minutes to midnight, protesters risked their lives and freedom at nuclear weapon sites. Join a rabble-rousing Catholic priest and Methodist minister, a kindergarten teacher, and a Quaker homemaker, as they beat swords into plowshares, or in this case, hammer on a B-52 bomber. Arrested and jailed, they bought the world time through doing time. Patricia Robertson's book, Buying Time, will help you • Experience another time • Understand why people take such risks • Take action for good Patricia Robertson was active in the peace movement during the 1980s, participating in civil disobedience at K.I. Sawyer Air Force Base in Michigan's upper peninsula and at Williams International, the maker of parts for cruise missiles. She currently resides in Michigan with her husband and Montana, the fat cat. "Patricia Robertson's book takes you down the little-trod path of heroic sacrifice in the name of faith and action." Ken Wyatt, retired editorial writer, Jackson Citizen Patriot (Michigan).
